Senate, Over Reagan's Veto, Enacts Major Spending Bill

WASHINGTON - The Republican-controlled Senate handed President Ronald Reagan the worst legislative defeat of his 20month administration Friday as it enacted — by the barest margin — a $14.2-billion spending bill over

The Senate vote was 60-30, exactly the two-thirds necessary to override the seto. Twenty-one Re-publicans joined 39 Democrats in oring to override the veto, while 26 Republicans and four Demo-crats voted to sustain Mr. Reagan's action. Seven of the 10 senators who did not vote were Republicans. On Thursday, the House voted the president's position.

Beore the vote, Mr. Baker pleaded with senators not to end the partnership between Congress and the president in the drive to "reestablish fiscal integrity."

In yet another demonstration of the importance the White House attached to the vote, Vice President George Bush was presiding over the Senate, a constitutional function of his office. But Mr. Bush's presence proved to be en-tirely symbolic, since he can vote only in the event of a tie,

But all the efforts of the White House and its allies in the Senate could not prevent the defections of senators who, though usually ad-ministration allies, insisted this bill was within the budget.

The setback was all the more serious in that it highlighted the demise of Republican unity in both houses that was a major factor in pushing Mr. Reagan's supply-side economic program through the Congress last year.

■ House Not Persuaded The New York Times reported carlier from Washington:

Democratic and Republican leaders of the House of Represent-atives said Thursday that President Reagan had failed to persuade members that the spending bill he vetoed was a budget buster. The leaders also cited institutional pride, the conviction of House members that they should be able to set spending priorities, and a potent lobbying effort by senior

Israel Bejects Arab Plan As Threat to Its Existence

Compiled by Our Staff From Disputches
JERUSALEM — Israel firmly rejected Friday the peace plan offered by the Arab League's summit conference at Fez. Morocco, dismissing it as devoid of new proposals and a design for Israel's eventual annihilation.

The Foreign Ministry said in a statement that the plan, drawn up after three days of discussions by Arab leaders, was even less acceptable than that offered last October hy King Fahd of Saudi Arahia, which Israel had also rejected.

The plan adopted by the Arab leaders Thursday night offered im-plicitly to recognize Israel.

But the eight-point proposal calls for the withdrawal of Israel from all Arab territories occupied since the 1967 war, establishment of a Palestinian state with East Jerusalem as its capital and recog-nition of the Palestine Liberation Organization as "the sole, legitimate representative" of the Palestinian people. King Hassan II of Morocco said in Fez Friday that the Arab world had decided "to open a new chap-ter in history" and would launch a continuing dialogue with the United States on new plans for peace in the Middle East.

The king said an Arab commission would travel to Washington to see President Ronald Reagan. He described the Arab plan as "an Point seven of the plan calls on the United Nations Security Coun-cil to guarantee peace for all states in the region. While Israel is not mentioned by name, the proposal specifically refers to a Palestinian state as among those whose security should he secured.

The Fahd plan called only for the recognition of the right of all states in the region to live in peace, without mentioning any country or the Palestinians by name.

The Israeli Foreign Ministry said the Fahd plan contained an ambiguous point "affirming the right of the countries of the region to live in peace," which was inter-preted by some diplomats and experts as holding the prospect of Arab recognition of Israel. The point was replaced at Fez with a less forthcoming provision for the Security Council to guarantee peace among countries of the re-

New York Times Service MOSCOW - For a survivor of the concentration camps at Maidanek, Auschwitz, and Bergen-Belsen, Bertha Ephraimovna Shokhovskaya is blessedly unmarked.

She has a broad, quick smile and a warmth that permeates the cramped Moscow apartment she shares with her daughter's family. She has barely a harsh word for anyone but the Nazis, and she has learned to deal with her memories of them with outward tranquillity.

After 37 years in the Soviet Union, she has few illusions. But whatever she may feel about the Soviet system is submerged by gratitude to the authorities bere for accepting her in Aug-ust, 1945, when no Western country would Now, however, Mrs. Shokhovskaya is caught in a hizarre dilemma. Her application to emigrate with her family to Israel has been refused because, the visa authorities here say. she has no immediate family there.

A 60-year-old pensioner, Mrs. Shokhovskaya believes that a sister, Eva, who would now be 59, may be in Israel. But she has had no contact with her since they were both sent to Maidanek in August, 1943. Her mother, two hrothers, and a sister died in the camps or the pogroms, and her father, owner of a small fabric-dyeing plant in Bialystock. eastern Poland, died when she was a child.

ternal Affairs told Mrs. Shokhovskaya's sonin-law, Leonid Preisman, a few weeks ago that the invitation for the family to settle in Israel, from an uncle, was not sufficient motive for the family to leave. Mr. Preisman was told to resultmit the applications in six months.

An emigration official in the Ministry of In-

The family's plight is shared by many Soviet Jews. Some figures suggest that as many as 400,000 of the 1.8 million Jews who registered in the 1979 census would like to leave the country, following the 261,000 who have left

But up to the end of July, only 1,723 Jews had left the country this year, compared with 7,386 in the same period last year, according to figures from the World Conference of Jewish Communities on Soviet Jewry. The figures tal-ly broadly with those available from the Dutch Embassy, responsible for Israeli consular mat-

Soviet official statements on the issue tend to vary. Two U.S. congressmen who visited here last year reported that Aleksandr Bovin, a commentator for Izvestia, the government newspaper, told them that there was "linkage" between Jewish emigration and the overall U.S.-Soviet relationship.

But Mr. Bovin was also reported to have said that Jewish emigration was no longer a problem because everyone who wanted to leave the country had done so, except for a few troublemakers."

The comment on troublemakers appeared to be a reference to the part played among political dissidents here by Jews, whose names are common among those shipped off to labor camps and internal exile for "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda."

Mr. Bovin's statements must be placed against the bureaucratic hurdles facing anyone hoping to leave. Many who have been repeatedly refused at six-month intervals have given up applying. Others never received the invita-tions mailed to them from Israel, and therefore cannot submit valid applications.

In addition, many see what happens to other applicants and give up. Thousands who have applied have been dismissed from their jobs and have seen their children expelled from colleges or refused entry.

Most of these complications are beyond Mrs. Shokhovskaya, who says that she rarely thought about emigration until she returned to Moscow two years ago from Yalta in the Crimea, where she moved in 1955 with her husband Grigori, a Russian.

The couple had one child, a daughter, Alia, in 1966. Her busband, 20 years older than she, died in 1968. Mrs. Shokhovskaya remained in Yalta working as an accountant until she reached pensionable age, then returned to Moscow with her daughter.

. She and her daughter, son-in-law, and twoyear-old grandson, survive on Mrs. Shokhovskaya's pension of 90 rubles a month, barely $124, and what her son-in-law earns at temporary jobs.

He quit his job as a history teacher last year when his application to emigrate brought the KGB secret police to the institute where he worked. That visit led to sharply curtailed teaching hours. Mrs. Shokhovskaya's story is of a woman tossed about by the upheavals of the century. She had completed a college education when the Germans overran Bialystock in 1941: Two years later, SS troops surrounded and destroyed the city's ghetto, accusing the inhabitants of harboring partisans. Almost the entire group was taken to the death camps.

En route to Maidanek, she cut her wrists in a group suicide pact with other women in her rail car. But she was saved. Later, she was one of only 150 women and 700 men, out of 200,000 inmates, who survived the camp.

Transferred to Auschwitz, she was assigned to work in the Hindenburg section, where inmates were used for slave labor in blast furnaces. She contracted typhus, but lived: Later she was taken briefly to Buchenwald, and then to Bergen-Belsen.

After the British rescued her, they refused her application to settle in Britain, and a legal peculiarity led her to be handed over to the Russians. Under the Hitler-Stalin Pact, Bialystock had become part of the Soviet Union after Soviet troops occupied it in 1939. After the war, it was returned to Poland, but in 1945 it was still in Soviet territory. Since Mrs. Shokhavskaya was theoretically a Soviet citizen, she was repatriated here.

Explaining her decision to seek emigration, in the French she learned as a schoolgirl, she spoke of what it has been to be a Jew and to have had to disguise it.
"I am a Jew," she said. "I am not a Russian.

Solidarity Says Protests Were a 'Moral Victory'

New Yark Times Service WARSAW — The underground leaders of Solidarity Friday called last week's anti-government dem-onstrations a "moral victory" that proved that "Polish society is determined to fight for its rights."

In a communiqué received in Warsaw, the five-man fugitive coordinating committee said it was debating "the forms of further struggle" and hinted at more demonstrations Nov. 10 and 11, which would mark the second anniversary of the suspended union's legal registration and the 64th anniversary of Poland's independence at the end of World War I.

Russia, Pakistan End Talks on Afghan War

By Dusko Doder Washington Post Service

MOSCOW — Pakistan's foreign secretary, Niaz Ahmed Naik, left for bome Friday after unpublicized talks with Soviet officials that included an extended discussion about possibilities for a political solution in Afghanistan.

Well-informed sources described as "remarkably friendly" the atmosphere in the two days of negotiations between Mr. Naik and Soviet foreign minister. Both sides were said to have res-tated their respective positions on the Afghan problem, but both agreed that the indirect talks between Pakistan and Afghanistan in Geneva earlier this year constituted "a welcome first step" toward au eventual settlement.

The talks here appeared to represent Moscow's effort to encourage and broaden the indirect channcl between Pakistan and Afghanistan with the aim of winning diplomane recognition for the Sovietbacked government in Kabul.

Talks to Resume in New York

The indirect talks, conducted through Diego Cordovez, the spe-cial United Nations envoy on the Afghan crisis, were due to resume between the foreign ministers of Pakistan and Afghanistan during the UN General Assembly session in New York later this month.

Apparently by coincidence, Mr. Cordovez is now accompanying George P. Sbultz when they meet UN Secretary-General Javier Sept. 28 in New York.

fore disputes become wars. The U.S. representative said Mr. Pérez de Cuéllar had made "pertinent and important observations" about the council's shortcomings, including the fact that "many important questions are not brought to the Security Council at all."

Among the issues she mentioned were the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, the imposition of mar-tial law in Poland and Iraq's war with Iran.

The council has approved two resolutions, 22 months apart, urging a cease-fire in the Gulf war. Elaborating on the secretarygeneral's report, Mrs. Kirkpatrick charged that "nations use the Se-

Many delegates here believe this advice was aimed primarily at the United States, which has vetoed moves to sanction Israel, and the Soviet Union, whose threat of a veto has kept issues like Afghanistan from reaching the council.

"I decline to read it that way." Mrs. Kirkpatrick said. "Very few nations take all measures to secure compliance. I have no doubt be was thinking of the U.S. and the Soviet Union, but many others as

"The Army should not be in the business of censoring the press, particularly Stars & Stripes, Mr. Proximire said. The newspaper's European and Pacific editions are designed to keep military people informed in places where other American publications often are not available.

There has long been tension within both editorial staffs, which include many civilians. The editor of each overseas Stars & Stripes is a military officer who receives guidance on the paper's contents from top Pentagon brass. General Barker confirmed in a

However, he said his intent was to urge balance.

The Barker memo was prompted by a "Focus on Women" series in Stars & Stripes' European edition which, without giving real mames; recounted experiences of Army women who said they had been raped, had been told they would not be promoted unless they had sex with male superiors, had been abused verbally as they tried atom men ic sional manner and had com-moncy.

Nicaraguan Forces Seen Ill-Prepared for War

By Raymond Bonner New York Times Service

MANAGUA - On a wall-sized operational map in an army brief-ing room, Nicaraguan military manders have marked the locations of nine guerrillas bases in Honduras, just across the border from Nicaragua.

It is from those bases, the com-manders say, that rightist military bands have cooducted sabotage attacks, mortar shellings and raids on Nicaraguan villages.

And on two occasions recently, the government says, light planes crossed into Nicaragua from Honduras. Good Sense at the UN

From THE WASHINGTON POST

There appears on this page today a penetrating and reasoned critique of the United Nations system as it actually operates, by someone who is a creature and servant of the system, its secretary-general, Javier Pérez de Cuellar. He has been up there on the 38th floor for less than a year, but already he sees and, more importantly, expresses publicly the disappointments that have been felt by a covey of other, outside critics.

He understands precisely why the United Nations bas fallen into disrespect and disuse, and he is in effect putting his job on the line in order to try to do something about it.

Many people might share Mr. Pérez de Cuellar's declared conviction that the international community is "perilously near to a new internatiooal anarchy."

He is that rare international person who is not so jaded by worldly cynicism or enfecbled by institutional self-pity as to figure that not much can be done. To improve the United Nations, the secretary-general recommends a series of changes in procedure and attitude. None of these changes would require a transformation in the nature of man. They would really do little more than infringe to a degree on the concept of sovereignty that lets individual nations preen and pontificate at the expense of the common good.

Often the "critics" of the United Nations are juxtaposed to its "supporters." But Mr. Pérez de Cuéllar handsomely fills both bills. Nothing he has said will please everybody. The Reagan administration, for instance, having just launched its own Middle East plan, may be slow to hail his call for even a less "partisan" United Nations to get out front in that area. A grand Security Council summit to discuss his and like proposals would be some affair. His broad purpose, however, cannot fail to stir those who uphold the Charter's commitment to world peace, and to unmask those who merely pretend Evil, a Health Problem?

Nearly 300 years ago, 19 women and men were executed in Salem. Mass., for witchcraft. The evidence against them came from seven females, all under 20 and several of them children, who had spasms, visions, inexplicable bite marks and bad dreams. Contemporary chronicles referred to them as "the af-flicted." A few of those hanged probably were witches or warlocks, most were innocents sullied by slander, and whether any deserved death is something for proponents of capital punishment to pooder. But their accusers pose a mystery whose solution changes with the centuries.

In their own time, the afflicted were regarded as victims of demonic possession. Only 60 years later, a governor of Massachusetts said that many people believed the girls "had been under bodily disorders which af-flicted their imaginations." In the 19th century, Silas Upham, a Salem minister and a standard authority oo the witchcraft trials, called their behavior "fraudulent."

In the 20th century, that septet of spastic, scratching, hallucinating females has been variously described as "classic bysterics" and "a pack of bobby-soxers" — depending on whether the writer was relying on a close reading of Freud or a close scrutiny of the rites of puberty. Most recently, however, both accused and accusers have been diagcosed as suffering from ergot poisoning.

Ergot, a fungus that grows on rye in cool, damp weather, can produce fits and strange visions, symptoms analogous to those reported in Salem. There being nothing cooler or damper than New England's coastal low-lands, the witchcraft affair, says Dr. Mary K. Matossian in support of a previous study, "may have been part of a largely unrecog-nized American health problem."

The devil in Massachusetts — and elsewhere — then, has dwindled from Satanic presence to neurosis to chemical. What the culture of one century finds extraordinary, the culture of the next explains as ordinary.

Will another 100 years bring yet another explanation of the unpredictability of evil? And give us yet another theory as to wby a 12-year-old in 1692 was seen "stretching up her arms as high as she could and crying Whish, Whish, Whish ... "?

Other Editorial Opinion

The System Survived

If anyone in years to come should ask of the International Monetary Fund what it did in the great financial crisis of 1982, it could with justification say it survived.

Before the Toronto meeting, and indeed to some extent still, the bankers' secret fear was that the debtor nations, driven by desperanon or bravado, might cock a snook at the whole system and refuse to accept any reasonable terms under which their debts could be rescheduled. Should this happen, then eve-ry Third World debt would be called into question and every banker would feel under threat. Such confidence as remains would evaporate. So the mere presence of the Mexi-cans, the Argentines and farther down the line the Nigerians and Indonesians was cause for some relief. And their reassuring words at 2110cm125 was there, rather than at the formal sessions, that the most important business of the week was done (facilitated by the consideration of the Canadian hosts, who removed the duty on alcobol for the duration).

The current crisis, although perhaps the most serious since the war, is indeed contain-able provided confidence is maintained.

And the indications from Toronto, at least as the delegates wing their way home, is that the dam has held. It is a measure of the distance traveled in these few heetic days that a oew role for the IMF as an international leoder of last resort is now seen as a distinct possibility. There are still problems to be overcome - it needs more money, for a start, with the Americans in particular remaining to be coovinced that they should contribute. Then Mexico and the others still bave to give unequivocal support for the strings which will come with the IMF loans. But at least the international debt problem is recognized, and cautious steps are being taken to defuse it. - The Times (London).

The Mafia Triumphant

Close to 200 murders in eight months makes the Mafia a much more serious and enduring phenomenoo in Italy than terrorism. But it is not only bloodshed that is significant in this widespread and longstanding criminal activity. There are also its firm roots, its influence, its national and international ramifications, its close link with the United States. Palermo has a shabby, small and rarely served airport. Beside it is a luxurious international facility — exclusively for direct service between Palermo and New York. When General Dalla Chiesa arrived at Palermo's humble airport receotly and took a taxi into the city, it may well be that Mafia capes from Italy and the United States who were planning his assassination were exchanging pleasantries in the terminal next door.

In 1963, U.S. Attorney General Robert

Kennedy mounted an impressive indictment against the Mafia, obliging Italy to set up a parliamentary investigating commission. Very soon thereafter President Kennedy was assassinated. Robert Kennedy lost his office — and his investigation — at the death of his brother. When he sought the presidency himself, he was assassinated in 1968. At the same time the Italian parliamentary commis-sion was dissolved, without having achieved more than minor results.

It is said that Gen. Dalla Chiesa, encourist terroristi derestimated the Mafia. He was tracking down the big fortunes and their ramificarions. This root interested him more than minor local assassinations. His investigation must have made considerable progress.

The assassination of Italy's most prestigious general was certain to unleash a wave of protests and rage — the better to publicize the Mafia as invulnerable.

Looking back, neither fascism nor the ancient monarchy nor the successive foreign oc-cupiers of Sicily could do much against the Mafia. Nor can presidents of the United States. For that reason the Mafia may be considered more worrisome even than terrorism, which is presently (ashionable.

They jumped down to push the man out of the way of an oncoming train. The man and Maddigan made it. McNeice didn't. "It's just something we did," Maddigan said later.

McNeice had everything to live for — a new marriage, a bright future, a family who loved him, friends who made him laugh, a job he enjoyed. [But] David McNeice knew a

A Wise Man's Ambition for Israel

PARIS — Nahum Goldmann, who died on Aug. 29, bas been buried on Jerusalem's Mount Herzl alongside the other historic leaders of the Zionist movement. That is fitting, although be refused to become an Israeli citizen and spent much of his life crincizing as well as helping to build and strengthen the Jewish state.

It is a pity that be did not have a chance to endorse President Reagan's Middle East peace plan. He would surely have done so with enthusiasm, because he never wavered in his conviction that Israel's future could be assured only by peace with its Arab neighbors.

With great discretion, and with access to many powerful leaders east and west, he contributed a lot to the evolution of attitudes accepting Israel, which have begun to show now at the Arab summit meeting in Fez. He had a role to play in the late President Anwar Sadat's dramatic peacemaking visit to Jerusalem.

Goldmann's weapons were wit and persistence, nothing more. He had more jokes than Ariel Sharon has guns, and he used them for his lifelong cause of seeking to make Israel "a spiritual and inspirational center for the Jewish people throughout the world" rest just an ambauled throughout the world," not just an embattled Middle Eastern fortress. That is why he never accepted office in the Israeli government, although he held many high posts — representative of the Jewish Agency for Palestine to the League of Nations, head of the World Zionist Organization, bead of the World Jewish Congress.

long before his death at 87, already frail and shriveled, he could still bound from his armchair and stand for nearly an bour, his eyes twinkling, when she called on the phone.

Goldmann measured Israel not by its military power but by its ability to project the strengths of morality, wisdom, the delight of life. Those are the qualities to which the renewed American diplomacy is trying to appeal, in effect over the beads of Prime Minister Begin and Defense Minister Sharon, and Arab intransigents.

The PLO's Yasser Arafat is apparently beginning to understand that this may be the last chance. It is evident that Israel's policy is not only to annex and settle the West Bank but to provoke the departure of enough Palestinian Arab nationalists to leave those who remain leaderless and politically docile. That is what the war in Lebanon and the attempt at destruction of the PLO were really about.

If the policy succeeded it would endow Israel with a sullen, hostile colony within its borders and doom it to remain a state of force, rather than one of grace as the Zionists dreamed. And despite the overwhelming display of military efficiency in Lebanon, it has very little chance of success in the long tun.

The Arabs have as much to say now as the The Arabs have as much to say how as the Israelis on what kind of place the Jewish state in their midst will become. Begin has support because, apart from Egypt, Israelis who would prefer the Goldmannesque vision of their future to Begin's attempt to restore the biblical past have been offered no choice but to fight for survival.

If there is an offer of peace on Israel's longest and most vulnerable fronder, even Begin may find it hard to choose between ceding land west of the Jordan River and taking a historic chance for peace. David Ben-Gurion created the Jewish state. Menachem Begin's memory could live alongside his as the leader who brought it to haven. Fears are so deep that it would be a difficult choice for a great many Israelis as well as for Begin. But neither they nor the Jews of the Diaspora could ultimately refuse without reversing the very meaning of Israel's existence.

From its beginning in 1948, it was always Israel that said it wanted only the right to survive alongside its neighbors. It was always the Arabs who said no. Israel cannot afford to exchange roles with its enemies, however exhausted and weakened they may be now. President Reagan's plan, handled with diplomanic brilliance, has created an opportunity out of tragedy for both Israelis and Arabs. Losing it can only create further tragedy for both.

In an article published posthumously, Goldmann pointed out that two generations after the Holocaust, anti-Semitism was on the rise again, that only 20 percent of world Jewry had chosen to live in Israel, and that "the Jewish question will exist as long as there are Jews."

Military victories, even in biblical times, did not bein the Jews survive but led to their dispersion. They still exist nonetheless because they clung to what he called their "singularity."

"Courage and loyalty in wartime are positive qualities," Nahum Goldmann wrote, "but they are characteristic of many other peoples... If this quality of Israel prevails in the future, the Jewish people will have lost their singularity and the hasis for their permanent existence." His voice will cootinue to echo.

An Early Vision

THIRTY-SEVEN years ago — on Sept 11, 1945, soon after the United States had compelled the Japanese to surrender by exploding atomic bombs over the cities of Hiroshima and Nagasaki on Aug. 6 and 9
— Secretary of War Henry L. Stim-soo wrote privately to President Harry S. Truman suggesting proposals for the awesome weapon's cootrol.

The following letter and excerpted memorandum, quoted by the Los Angeles Times with permission of the Yale University Library, were virtually the last official documents Stimson wrote. He retired a few days later after 40 years in government service.

Dear Mr. President: In handing you today my memo-randum about our relations with Russia in respect to the atomic bomb, I am not unmindful of the fact that when in Potsdam, I talked with you about whether we could be safe in sharing the atomic bomb with Russia while she was still a police state and before she put into effect provisions assuring personal rights of liberty to the individual citizen.

I still recognize the difficulty and am still convinced of the ultimate importance of a change in Russian atti-tude toward individual liberty, but I have come to the conclusion that it would not be possible to use our pos-session of the atomic bomb as a direct lever to produce the change. I have become convinced that any demand by us for an internal change in Russia as a condition of sharing in the atomic weapon would be so resented that it would make the objective we have in view less probable.

I believe that the change in attitude toward the individual in Russia will come slowly and gradually and I am satisfied that we should not delay our approach to Russia in the matter of the atomic bomb until that process has been completed. My reasons are set forth in the memorandum 1 am handing you today.

Furthermore, I believe that this long process of change in Russia is more likely to be expedited by the closer relationship in the matter of the atomic bomb which I suggest and the trust and confidence that I believe would be inspired by the method of approach which I have outlined.

Faithfully yours. Secretary of War.

Henry L. Stimson

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT:

Subject: Proposed Action for Control of Atomic Bombs

THE advent of the atomic bomb mnm of 20 years is not nearly as important to the world and civilization and probably even greater political as to make sure that when they do get interest throughout the civilized world. The temptation will be strong for the Soviet political and military leaders to acquire this weapon in the shortest possible time.

Unless the Soviets are voluntarily going to maintain the Anglo-Saxon bloc over against the Soviet in the possession of this weapon. Such a condition will almost certainly stimulate feverish activity on the part of the Soviet toward the de-velopment of this bomb in what will in effect be a secret armament race of a rather desperate character. There is evidence to indicate that such activity may have already commenced.

If we feel, as I assume we must,

that civilization demands that some day we shall arrive at a satisfactory international arrangement respecting the cootrol of this new force, the question then is bow long we can afford to enjoy our momentary superiority in the hope of achieving our immediate peace council objectives.

Whether Russia gets control of the necessary secrets of production in a minimum of say four years or a maxi-it they are willing and cooperative partners among the peace-loving nations of the world. I consider the problem of our satisfactory relations with Russia as not merely connected with but as virtualperhaps irretrievably embittered by the way in which we approach the solution of the bomb with Russia. For if we fail to approach them now and merely continue to negotiate with them, having this weapon rather ostentatiously on our hip, their suspi-cions and their distrust of our purpose and motives will increase. objective must be to get the best kind of international bargain we can -kept and saving civilization not for five or for 20 years, but forever.

The chief lesson I have learned in a long life is that the only way you can make a man trustworthy is to trust him; and the surest way to make him untrustworthy is to distrust him and show your distrust.

If the atomic bomb were merely another though more devastating military weapon to be assimilated into it would be one thing. We could then follow the old custom of secrecy and nationalistic military superiority rely-ing on international caution to pro-scribe the future use of the weapon as we did with gas. But I think the bomb instead constitutes merely a first step in a new control by man over the invited into the partnership upon a ly dominated by the problem of the forces of nature too revolutionary our pattern of international relations, cepts. I think it really caps the climax of the race between man's growing technical power for destructivenes and his psychological power of self-control and group control — his mor-al power. If so, our method of ap-proach to the Russians is a question of the most vital importance in the evolution of buman progress.

My idea would be a direct proposal, after discussion with the British, that we would be prepared in effect to enter an arrangement with the Russians, the general purpose of which would be to control and limit the use of the atomic bomb as an in-strument of war and so far as possible to direct and encourage the development of atomic power for peaceful and humanitarian purposes. I would make such an approach just as soon as our immediate political considerations make it appropriate.

COFIA - "How far can you go in) this confrontation started by the Reagan administration against the socialist countries? I keep wondering whether there are any sober-minded people in the United States who bave an understanding of what 'thermonuclear means. What will happen to the planet, to bumanity in general?"

This was the way Todor Zhivkov, chairman of the State Council of Bulgaria, secretary-general of its Com-munist Party and the Soviet Union's most faithful friend, greeted an American visitor. "I am a passionate, fanatical champion of peaceful co-existence between the socialist and capitalist systems," he said.

President Reagan's "zero option" plan is, for example, "absolutely imacceptable," said Zhivkov. "It omits all mention of the forward-based nuclear forces of America's European allies, Britain and France."

Asked if he did not think that the Asked it he did not think that the Soviet Union was at least equally responsible for stepping up the nuclear arms race. Zhivkov demurred vigorously: "Open confrontation was started by the United States in the late 70s and has been particularly interested by the Passes admiration. tensified by the Reagan administra-tion ever since. The initiative is in fact no longer with us — it's now up to the United States and NATO."

Zhivkov, whose sparse light hair, animated face and briskly informal manner mask his 71 years, looked up from the untouched glass of yogurt on the table in front of him. "I'm optimistic that reason will eventually prevail. There's no other way out."

The Bulgarian press is probably the most virulently anti-American in the Soviet bloc. A recent article describ-ing President Reagan's proposed chemical-warfare budget was headlined, "Gas Chambers for Europe." Agreeing that "sometimes our journalists may run to extremes," Zhivkov added. "We have different ideas about democracy."

Bulgaria is about as politically and economically orthodox a Communist regime as one can find outside the Soviet Union, yet it, too, is oot impervi-ous to change. Under a plan dubbed the New Economic Mechanism, it has been following the growing pattern in Eastern Europe of greater decentral-

Eastern Europe of greater decentral-ization of managerial decisions as well as of physical plant. In the last few years Bulgaria has been transformed from a state whose GNP was 25 percent industrial and 75 percent agricultural to just the re-verse, and 70 percent of its farms are now mechanized. Within the Soviet bloc, it is internally one of the most prosperous and externally one of the financially strongest. While every other Soviet-bloc country including the Soviet Union itself had an adverse balance of payments last year,

Bulgaria ran a surplus.

It has a manageable foreign debt of 12.2 billion, little if any unemployment and a steady and reliable market for its industrial and agricultural exports in the Soviet Union and other East European countries, which account for 75 percent of its total trade. It is a major exporter of electronic products to the Soviet bloc — and of trained technicians to the Arab world. The average Bulgarian is better off than the average Russian.
Like the other East European countries, Bulgaria wants to expand trade with the United States, But, unlike the others, Bulgaria is unwilling to submit to congressional requirements for "most-favored-nation" status. Zhivkov said: "When we want to develop relations, we don't tell you what to do about your corporations, your unemployment or your racial discrimination."

"Anyway," he added with a grin,

"so far as American priorities are concerned, we're the last button on the shirt." He spoke as if he were not unduly disturbed by the thought.

This is the second of two articles on Bulgaria by the former senior editor of The New York Times.

'Certainly We Have Strayed Far From the UN Charter ...

UNITED NATIONS. N.Y. — Certainly we have strayed far from the UN Charter in recent years. Governments that believe they can win an international objective by force are often quite ready to do so, and domestic opinion not infrequently applauds such a course.

The Security Council all too often finds itself unable to take decisive action to resolve inter-oational conflicts, and its resolutions are increasingly defied or ignored by those who feel themselves strong enough to do so. Too frequently the council seems powerless to generate the support and influence to ensure that its decisions are respected, even when these are taken unanimously. Thus the process of peaceful settlement of disputes prescribed in the Charter is often brushed aside. Sterner measures for world peace were envisaged in Chapter VII of the Charter, which was conceived as a key element of the United Nations system of collective security, but the prospect of realizing such measures is now deemed almost impossible in our divided international community. We are perilously near to a new international anarchy.

There are many ways in which governments could actively assist in strengthening the system prescribed in the Charter. More systematic, less last-minute use of the Security Council would be one means. If the council were to keep an active watch on dangerous situations and, if necessary, initiate discussions with the parties before they reach the point of crisis, it might often be possible to defuse them at an early stage before they degenerate into violence.

Unfortunately, there has been a tendency on the part of member states to avoid bringing critical problems to the Security Council, or to do so too late for the council to have any se-rious influence on their development. It is essential to reverse this trend if the council is to play its role as the primary authority for international peace and security.

I do not believe that it is necessarily wise or world public opinion. Adequate working relations between the permanent members of the Security Council are a requirement for the council's effectiveness. Whatever their relations may be outside the United Nations, within the council the permanent members, which have special rights and special responsibilities under the Charter, share a sacred trust that should not go by default owing to their bilateral difficulties. There is a tendency in the United Nations for governments to act as though the passage of a resolution absolved them from further responsibility for the subject in question. Nothing could be further from the intention of the Charter. In fact, resolutions, particularly those unanimously adopted by the Security Council, should, serve as a springboard for governmental support and determination and should motivate their policies outside the United Nations.

In other words, the best resolution in the world will bave little practical effect unless governments of member states follow it up with the appropriate support and action.

Very often the secretary-general is allotted the function of following up on the implemen-tation of a resolution. Without the continuing diplomatic and other support of member states, the secretary-general's efforts often have less chance of bearing fruit. In order to avoid the tendency of the Security Council to become in-volved too late in critical situations, it may well be that the secretary-general should play a more forthright role in bringing potentially dangerous situations to the attention of the council within the general framework of Article 99 of the Charter. In order to carry out effectively the preventive role foreseen for the secre-tary-general under Article 99, I intend to develop a wider and more systematic capacity for fact-finding in potential conflict areas. Such etforts would naturally be undertaken in close coordination with the council. Moreover, the council itself could devise more swift and responsive procedures for send-ing good offices missions, military or civilian servers or a United Nations presence to areas of potential conflict. Such measures could inhibit the deterioration of conflict situations and might also be of real assistance to the parties in resolving incipient disputes by peaceful means.

Peacekeeping operations can function prop-erly only with the cooperation of the parties and on a clearly defined mandate from the Se-curity Council. They are based on the assumption that the parties, in accepting a United Nations peacekeeping operation, commit them-selves to cooperating with it. This commitment is also required by the Charter, under which all concerned have a clear obligation to abide by the decisions of the council. I recommend that member states, especially the members of the Security Council, should again study urgently the means by which our

peacekeeping operations could be strengthened. An increase in their military capacity or anthority is only one possibility - a possibility which may well give rise in some circumstances to se-rious political and other objections.

Another possibility is to underpin the authority of peacekeeping operations by guarantees, including explicit guarantees for collective or individual supportive action.

We should examine with utmost frankness the reasons for the reluctance of parties to some conflicts to resort to the Security Council or to use the machinery of the United Nations. Allegations of partisanship, indecisiveness or inca-pacity arising from divisions among member states are sometimes invoked to justify this sidetracking of the council. We should take such matters with the utmost seriousness and ask ourselves what justifications, if any, there are for them and what can be done to restore the council to the position of influence it was given in the Charter. Let us consider what is perhaps our most formidable international problem — the Middle East. I feel that the Security Council, the only place in the world where all of the parties concerned can sit at the same table, could become a most useful forum for this absolutely essential effort. But if this is to be done, careful consideration will have to be given to what procedures, new if necessary, should be used and what rules should govern the negotiations. I do not believe that a public debate, which could well become rhetorical and confrontational, will be enough. A related question concerns what are productive and what are counterproductive approaches. A parliamentary debate may generate me-toric, and sometimes even a touch of acrimony. But negotiations and the resolution of urgent problems require a different approach. Debate without effective action crodes the credibility of the organization. I feel that if we wish to achieve results, we must make a more careful study of the psychological and political aspects of problems and address ourselves to our work accordingly. It is insufficient to indulge in a course of action that merely tends to strengthen extreme positions.

Finally, let me appeal to all governments to make a serious effort to reinforce the protective and pre-emptive ring of collective security, which should be our common shelter and the most important task of the United Nations. The will to use the machinery of the Charter needs to be consciously strengthened and all governments must try to look beyond shortterm national interests to the great possibilities of a more stable system of collective internaof a more stable system of collective interna-tional security, as well as to the very great perils of failing to develop such a system. For these reasons I would suggest that consideration be given to the usefulness of holding a meeting of the Security Council at the highest possible level, one object of which might be to discuss in depth some of the problems I have questioned.

Bargains at Sales Of 'Minor Objects'

By Souren Melikian International Herald Tribune

ONDON — A new era seems about to open in the art market.

Pleasing minor objects are once again treated as pleasing minor objects, instead of being drummed up by auction houses, praised to high heaven for qualities they don't have, and offered at prices no one should

That is the object of Sotheby's "fast sales," inaugurated in June 1981 when the recession was already bitting the market. Since then, 28,500 lots have been sold in the course of 58 sales totalling £2.268,000 and leaving only 14 percent of unsold items. This score is all the more remarkable when compared with the difficulties encountered by the more at 34 New Bond Street is startling. For those who were already haunting the auction world in the late '50s it feels as if the wheel of time has been the auction world in the late '50s it feels as if the wheel of time has been turned back. The thin catalogs with three or four-line entries have no illustrations and are inexpensive. It cost 95 pence to buy the 780-item catalog of Sept. 7-8 that included "English eeramics and glass, Art Nouveau, Writches and Clocks, European works of art and bronzes, Miniatures, Jewellery, English and Foreign Silver-Plated and Allied Wares, Objects of Vertu . . ." There is no advertising other than in English trade journals and London dailies, and no gimmicks. "Cheap and trim" just about describes it. and trim" just about describes it

As I came in, Nicola Redway, who used to take Art Nouveau sales nt the now extinct Sotheby's Belgravia, was wielding the hammer.

A quick session of time and not-so-fine pieces of metalwork was being fired at the attendance. A Liberty and Co. pewter bowl described as having been made "after 1903" reproduced the shape of the Eastern Mediterranean bowls of the second millenium B.C. — reflecting the early impact of museology on Western European art. The estimate, £15 to £25, was moderate and the knockdown price, even more so — £8, bringing it to £9 with the 11.5 percent commission charge.

A Hukin and Heath electroplated warming dish "possibly designed by Christopher Dresser" was not n great success and was bought in (that is, went unsold) at £18 against an estimate of £50 to £80. With the help of the name of Charles Rennie Mackintosh, who designed it in 1903, n solitary electroplated teaspoon did n little better at £67. Nevertheless the price was still one-third below the bottom estimate.

This reflects the overall translet of the austine, most chieft mean.

This reflects the overall trend of the auction; most objects were knocked down well below the higher estimate, and not infrequently even below the lower one. A pewter vase with molded holly around its sinuous body marked "L. Kann," expected to fetch at least £20, fell at £5, Its typical Art Nouveau feel with the swirling movement of the holly failed to rescue it. Among the rare exceptions to this lack of enthusiasm were objects including in their decoration the sinuous women in long, flowing gowns that have come to be seen as the very symbol of Art Nouveau. A good pewter dish of irregular form with the figure of a young woman in relief somehow melting into the surface of the dish soared to £111 — an almost dizzying 20 percent above the high estimate.

But Art Deco enjoyed no such favor. For some reason, only the very randest pieces done in that style by the leading designers of the '20s and 30s do well at auction. These sometimes reach prices comparing with those of the 18th-century art. Not so the objects based on their design or actually reflecting the original design of lesser known artists. Whether metalwork or woodwork, they can be among the cheapest items to be had at auction.

The sale included a pair of chromium-plated ashtrays or glass holders, designed in the '30s by the Lemaire firm as articulated cylinders, that still look modern half a century later. They left everybody cold at £28 estimate £60 to £80. Cheapest of all perhaps was a very attractive cigarette box, or rather castet, given its size — 13 centimeters high — and the 18 small compartments revealed by the fall-down front. The bird's eye walnut veneer, inlaid with dots and stripes of shagreen and edged with ivory, made it an Abstractionist-Cubist objet d'art well in tune with the Bauhaus style as well as the precinetist experiments of Moholy-Nagy and Mondrian in the '30s. It sold for £28 — far below the £44 low end of Faience produced at the time is hardly more successful. A Royal Doulton "Tango" dinner service of 36 pieces decorated with a Klee-like geometric composition in dark gray and green on the ivory ground was knocked down at only £446. The price, which was four times the mid-range of the modest estimate, was considered stunningly successful.

The low pricing of Art Deco objects not graced by the signature of one or another of the big shots of the period merely confirms the trend of the past season in Paris and London, where it is perhaps more marked.

If the next few sales bear out the restrained mood suggested by the auction at the Gleneagles Hotel at the end of August and by Sotheby's "last sale" this week, the market should be very different this year. Speculative sectors artificially kept at peak levels by prodding n few buyers with lots of cash and little understanding of the market mechanisms, such as in Islamic art for example, will be in danger of drastic depression, possibly not in the very short term, but within the next 12 to for most-faundes

A brilliant auctioneer who has just the right feel for his andience, Barber may well contribute to stepping up the process.

As for the big ambitious sales, their number is unlikely to decrease, for prestige reasons, whether at Sotheby's or Christie's. But my guess is that failures that did not visibly result in any lowering of estimates and reserves last season, will lead to policy changes in the coming season. Neither Sotheby's, despite its impressive financial strength, nor Christiether Sotheby's, despite its impressive financial strength, nor Christian strength. tie's, nor any auctioneer for that matter, can continue to bear the cost of high buy-in rates caused by attempts at playing around with prices.

It Takes One to Tango

By Noel Goodwin

what institutions is tional Herald Tribune ONDON — Maybe it used to take two to tango, but one does very nicely in the course of "5 Tangos," newly added to the reper-tory of Sadler's Wells Royal Ballet. Hans van Manen first devised this 30-minute dance suite in tango rhythms for the Dutch National Ballet in 1977. He has restaged it for the British company, which premiered it before leaving on their 10-week Pacific tour.

A certain soft-centered character may partly be due to the musical arrangement, for conventional orchestra, of tangos composed by the Argentine-born Astor Piazzolla, ose music first attracted van Manen. They were written for an instrumental ensemble prominently featuring the bandoneon, a South American keyed accordion, and its typically pungent flavor is lost in the version played at the Sadler's Wells Theater to comply with musicians' union restrictions against taped music for dance.

As it is, the 14 dancers swirled and dipped in disciplined style with classical steps, sleekly dressed all in black with flashes of red in the women's full skirts, against the stylized city skyline of Jean-Paul Vroom's designs. They were led by David Ashmole, whose tango for one was sinnous and assertive, and June Highwood, seen with six male partners in a somewhat cabaretstyle number. Some episodes are surprisingly somber, the music drawing on folk origins. The tango ballet should help to diversify the company's repertory more successfully than Kenneth MacMillan's "Quartet," another suite of plotiess dances to conducfor Barry Wordsworth's orchestral version of Verdi's only string quar-tet. Each movement is a separate dance conception brought together only at the end, but the work fails to build a consistent or cumulative character on the first-movement duet, which MacMillan earlier created as a self-contained item for Flisabetta Terabust and Peter

By coincidence Terabust and Schaufuss were to be seen a few nights previously dancing this more flamboyant version of the MacMillan duet at Royal Festival Hall during the London debut of Aterballetto, a modest but attractive Italian company based at Reggio Emilia, where it was formed five years ago and is now directed by Amedeo Amodio. Though one or two works were thought overambitious, they have n well assorted repertory. For London it included George Balanchine's "Allegro Brillante," led by Terabust and Schaufuss in zestful style, and the memorably vivid "Mythical Hunters," by Glen Tetley. Created for Israel's Batsheva company nearly 20 years ago, Tetley's modern-dance cycle of life and rebirth in mythological ritual, to music by Oedcon Partos, was danced by a strong ensemble with n fine central performance by Isa-

Amodio himself was responsible for a wacky-looking version of "Aurora's Wedding," which put the dancers into stylized rehearsal gear to perform a suite from "The Sleeping Beauty" as if they were trying Petipa's dances on for size. Some were given straight; some were surprisingly changed, as in n multiple Bluebirds number, but these were never overdone,

Pol Bury: Moving and Melting

By Michael Gibson

DARIS - Pol Bury is internationally known for his sneakily moving sculptures and wiggling fountains, one of which was recently installed in the Guggenheim Museum in New York The de Paris is currently displaying of his works — 34 sculptures, 35 drawings, 14 wood-en reliefs, as well as photos and tions have been his use of mag-nets and electric motors in order tn set his works in motion. This does not mean that be is the only artist to use them, but he uses them in his own peculiar way.

The motor-and-magnet installation works with any surface on which a collection of metal spheres or similar objects have been placed. As the magnet moves slowly under the spheres it causes either an imperceptibly slow movement or a sudden, brief movement of one sphere and then another. The displacement often produces a click, which is disquieting because the visitor who has not seen the movement immediately glances at the piece only to find that it is once again almost motionless. He then waits, watching the piece almost suspiciously, with the sort of attention an animal would give to some un-derbrush in which it had heard a twig break.

Heightened Eeriness

That he uses such movement in works that have a high technical gloss somehow increases the eeriness and curiously dissociates the appearance of the piece, its innerable technicality, from the underlying implication of biological frailty and alertness. Or it dissociates the formal aspect of the work, which is one of technical elegance in which no animal anxicty should intervene, and its content which is repressed, so to speak, just as the atavistic emotions it suggests can be said to be repressed or dormant.

In doing this Bury has succeeded in introducing movement into sculpture not arbitrarily, as is mostly the case, so that one wishes the work would just sit still, but as an original aesthetic dimension with an expressive content of its own.

His work can of course be interpreted in other ways and seen, for instance, as the aesthetic expression of a random character in nature itself. But this, I suspect, is already a rationalization, and Bury himself, borrowing a phrase from Balzac, entitled a collection of his writings on and around art "les horribles mouvements de l'im-

Bury's father owned a garage, we learn from the booklet and collection of post cards that passes for a catalog, and built cars for his own enjoyment. This may not be all that irrelevant, since a car is in a sense a moving sculpture. Consequently one might perceive Bury's work as being, on a more private level, an aesthetic transposition of his father's semi-pro-fessional hobby.

This is interesting because Bury, born in Belgium in 1922, belongs to the second generation of artists of the machine age the first generation being that of Duchamp, Picabia and (more solemnly) Leger, to mention but three Duchamp and Picabia, with a good measure of nihilistic derision, were reducing nature, burnan nature and sexuality in particular (as a hinge between external nature and man's inwardness) to a mechanical model. The autombile engine was presented as a sardonic account of what sex was all about.

Bury, having seen automobiles since early childhood, we must assume, is no longer struck dumb by their apparition, a machina ex deo. but considers them as a normal part of the landscape. There is no trace of a mystique of the machine in his work and instead viewing it as the basic model of nature (as though Henry Ford had finally produced what philos-ophers had sought in vain for five millennia), Bury quite unselfconsciously reverses the proposi-tion and turns his machines back The exhibition also includes works that are gradual decon-structions of buildings, and other rigid structures such as signs, rulers or Mondrian paintings. Bury calls them ramollisements, which means "softenings," but with the sort of implication one has in mind when one talks of "softening of the brain." The Mondrian, for instance, is shown first in its pristine rigidity and then, in nine states of gradual distortion that reduce it to a quivering jelly, as though reflected in a set of fairground mirrors.

In viewing this sort of work one cannot belp thinking that the point is slight - Duchamp made it with more bizarre economy in his mètres étalons" — and won-dering whether it deserved so much attentive craftsmanship.

Craftsmanship, in any event, is Bury's strong point, and it is impeccable workmanship that makes his sculptures as eloquent and obvious as an abstract idea.

Summer Is Hollywood's Best Ever

By Aljean Harmetz New York Times Service

OS ANGELES — "E.T. The Extra-Terrestial." "Rocky "Star Trek II: The Wrath of n," "Poltergeist," "The Best e Whorehouse in Texas" and "An Officer and a Gentleman" have won the summer box-office race in the United States.

As the most lucrative summer in the history of the movies drifted to an end. A.D. Murphy, box-office analyst for Variety, estimates that more than $1.33 billion was pushed through ticket windows during the 15-week period that started Memorial Day weekend. Box-office figures for the first sev-en months of 1982 are 17 percent above last year.

This does oot mean that all of the 39 films released by the major studios between mid-May and mid-Angust have made money. An astounding 18 percent of the moncy spent by movie patrons - $235 million - was earned by a single film, "E.T."

Twentieth Century-Fox, which limped through the summer, had a string of box office failures in "Megaforce," "Author, Author," "Six Pack" and "The Pirate Movie," and only one success, "Young Doctors in Love

Columbia's "Hanky Panky," Paramount's "Grease II," Orion's
Woody Allen film, "A Midsummer Night's Sex Comedy," and Disney's movie version of a video game, "Tron," were all major disappointments for distributors.

Success in Hollywood is cyclical, and the biggest winning streak this summer belonged to Universal Pictures. From "E.T." and "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas" to "Fast Times at Ridgemont High," almost exerciting the studio almost everything the studio touched, including "Conan the Barbarian," turned to box-office

Of the six movies Universal released, audiences rejected only the studio's deliberately disgusting monster movie, "The Thing." Whatever kept audiences away from watching the Thing from outer space devouring scientists, bowever, did not keep them from watching a madman slashing teenagers in 3-D in Paramount's "Friday the 13th - Part 3." The success of "Friday the 13th - Part 3" which cost less than $2 million and has taken in $30 million, is bound to produce a string of 3-D imitations for U.S. moviegoers next Paramount, like Universal, had a good summer. Its "Star Trek II" brought in $76 million, for third place in the box-office derby, behind "E.T." and "Rocky's" $111 million. Paramount learned n pain-Trek" movie - which cost $42 million to make and about $10 million to market and yet barely broke even despite selling nearly $100 million in tickets in the United States and Canada. "Star Trek II's" budget was n bare $11 mil-bon, so the studio will make a handsome profit. High revenues for a movie do not necessarily mean high profits. In the first place, theaters keep approximately half the money. Paramount's "An Officer and a Gentle-man" has sold $45 million worth of tickets. Columbia's "Annie" has sold $52.7 million, but its cost has been estimated at nearly $50 million. "An Officer and a Gentleman" cost $7.5 million.

Nor are comparisons even that simple. An advertising campaign can cost $4 million or $12 million. A movie that has sat on the shelf for months before being released can have $6 million tacked on in interest charges. "Annie" is un-questionably a psychological and financial disappointment for Columbia because the studio expected the film to be a blockbuster.

Columbia, however, might not lose money on it. A considerable amount of "Annie's" cost was laid off through an investment partnership and a pay-cable sale. Mer-chandising of such "Annie" items as dolls and animal crackers will also bring Columbia millions.

The biggest individual winner. of course, was the director Steven Spielberg, who masterminded and produced "Poltergeist" and whose "E.T." will be a cottage industry

Despite the success of two and the ghost story "Poltergeist," at $65.7 million — the studio's financial position is still shaky. All the profits of "Rocky III" and "Poltergeist," at $100 millions are a perfectly and "Poltergeist," and "Poltergeist," and "Poltergeist," and its profits of "Rocky III" and "Poltergeist," will have a perfect the profits of "Rocky III" and "Poltergeist," will have a perfect the profits of "Rocky III" and "Poltergeist," and its profits of the profits o "Poltergeist" will just pay a year's interest on MGM/U A's debt of more than $500 million.

At Warner Bros., whose parent company made more than twice as much money last year from its Atari video games and and computers than from its studio, Clint Eastwood's "Firefox" earned $45 million, but "The World According to Garp" is at a disappointing

Perhaps the biggest surprise is the success of "An Officer and a Gentleman." Hollywood wisdom says that a "soft" movie without obvious exploitatation elements should not be released during the summer. But the making-of-a-man love story of a naval air cadet starring Richard Gere has received immensely positive audience-word-

Released less than a month ago, An Officer and a Gentleman" is in seventh place. It will probably pass "Poltergeist"; "The Best Lit-tle Whorehouse," at $60.7 million; Annie" and "Conan" at $50 million, and end up the year in fourth place among the summer movies.

er earned more than $35 million.

Thriving 'Denne' of Artists

By Rona Dobson

WOMENSWOLD, England — Figures life-size and lifelike stand, sprawi, gesture, prepare for bed; big jokey toy-boxes open to display shock-crotic art within; fragmented reliefs of people in vul-nerable, intimate, often ridiculously fuony poses hang on the walls alongside large paintings in a vast. mellowed-brick mansion surrounded by acres of ancient trees and flocks of sheep.

The tiny Kent village of Womenswold, a few miles inland from Dover, had watched with some surprise while the estate in its midst, Denne Hill, metamorphosed from dignified decay to exuberant vitality as an art center run by Nicholas Treadwell, a London gallery owner, with the belp of resident artists and sculptors.

Treadwell who once drove a hus around Britain bringing art to the people — a favorite endeavor of the busy '60s — now shepherds a stable of unknowns into the public eye from his gallery. The estate in Kent was a typically adventurous expansion, with the special advantage of proximity to the Channel ports; the Treadwell brand of art has a sizable continental connec-

Inmisitive Sheep

He and a willing gang of artists and helpers worked on the 19thcentury house, restored its gracious rooms, shored up shaky parts of the structure, painted the interi-or and planted the tangled, weedy gardens with grass, gladioli and a few sculptures, while inquisitive sheep watched from the fenced-off fields nearby. "All that land be-longs to the house but it's always been rented out for grazing," Treadwell said. "We have plenty of parkland as it is, and intend to make our own sculpture garden soon, a kind of walled patio, I think, filled with our own objects and figures. But there's more work to do in the bouse itself, particularly smartening up the outside n bit, now we've cleaned up the inside."

Two years ago, he opened Denne Hill to the public, and strange accents began cropping up in pubs as foreign fans sought him out. Londoners come down for preview parties that can last a weekend. Exhibitions are held throughout the summer in addition to the permanent collection. Every room is filled with contemporary work, iconoclastic, eyecatching, dramatic, erotic.

Treadwell's team of artists range in age from 20 to 61. Alike in an almost aggressive originality, their collective endeavors are christened "Superhumanism," The works carry echoes of many movements -Photorealism, Hyperrealism, Sur-realism (without the coyness), inspired infantile fantasy (some imbued with remembered melancholy), allusive, anecdotal, witty, often verging on the pomographic. They aim at impact and immediate They aim at impact and immediate interest, and achieve this with flair, talent and, above all, bumor.

The fragmented reliefs by Robert Knight, the oldest artist of the elan, show the buman body, warts and all: gnat-bitten ladies with painfully real red bites on battock and breast contrast with sensually painted nude torsos and bodies in tight jeans clasped by detached hands. Harry Holland's paintings, exhibited last year in Brussels, show the body in action, using smudged focus and soft color effects but filled with a subtle sense of urgency, of something odd happening within the frame or just outside it.

Graham Ibbeson makes playful pop sculptures in fiberglass, cloth-capped bulky men with winged shoulders crouching opposite each other, arms spread for flight; a re-lentlessly ordinary Batman in glasses with cigarette stuck to lip, skinny body clad in ill-fitting su-perhero costume; twin girls staring and pointing. Jo Bondy's boxes are like Pandora's — anything might lurk within. An innocent-looking cigar box holds a selection of male and female organs wrapped in to-bacco leaf; the lids are often tableaux as carefully worked as the innards. Mike Gorman, born and

IMF Meeting May Have Shown That Form Can Define Content

TORONTO — An annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund and World Bank, with 10,000 financial officials, bankers, scrats and journalists from more than a hundred countries, is like a great blob. Yet such assemblies as the one that ended Thursday in Topoto sometimes mysteriously bear fruit.

Japan's minister of finance, Michio Watanabe, brought the wisdom of the East to explain this mystery. "I would like to close," he told his fellow delegates, "with my favorite expression in Oriental philosophy: What is empitiness, that is form. As 'empitiness' also means 'sky' in Ispanese, it symbolizes what is infinite and intangible, such as the heart.
"On the other hand," he continued, "as 'form' means 'color' in Japanese, it symbolizes what is finite and visible, such as human behavior. Thus the literal translation of the phrase would simply be 'Sky is color.' in other words, it can be interpret-

desire to "put a burr

under the saddle" of

ed thus: The heart, which extends infinitely within ourselves, can only be expressed through our dai-ly visible behavior." Mr. Sprinkel was talking about the U.S.

This year's meeting of the world's money men partly succeeded in transforming the infinite and misagible into the finite and visiother countries. At the start of the meetings a week ago, there was e vague apprehension of the abyss into which the world's monetary system might fall. During the session, ministers and bankers walked up to that abyss, took a good look and decided not only that it was horrible but also that they should move promptly to reconcile their differences over what needs to be done to keep nations and the world from sliding into the pit.

In the beginning the United States had been portrayed as Scrooge-like in its response to proposals for rescuing countries endangered by debt. The United States, in turn, portrayed others as profligates who thought they could solve problems by throwing money at them - so much mon-

By the time it was over, however, Beryl Sprinkel, undersecretary of the Treasury for monetary affairs and the principal U.S. negotiator here, was saying that the differences between nations had been markedly nar-rowed. He spoke of common "understanding and sympathy" for the glight of the debt-plagued and fearful Third World, while stressing that nations seeking financial help had to "get their budgets under control" and to "get their exports up" or no rescue would work.

The gap between views on the need for increased IMF quotas — the the gap between views on the need for increased IMF quotas — the find's lending capital — had also narrowed. In the beginning, Washington seemed to want an insignificant increase above the fund's present total of $65.9 billion, while other countries were calling for increases ranging from 100 percent to 250 percent. Although no resolution of that issue was reached in Toronto, Mr. Sprinkel indicated that other countries have been moving down and the United States moving up, although he refused to put a number on what the United States might settle for.

'Show Me'

The United States has not entirely dropped its "I'm from Missouri, thow me" stance. (Mr. Sprinkel happens to be from Missouri, thow me" stance. (Mr. Sprinkel happens to be from Missouri.) In the final stages at Toronto, though, the United States was trying to demonstrate that it was providing leadership rather than dragging its feet. Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan early declared that the United States had won the support of the IMF's managing director, Jacques de Larosière, for its proposal of a special emergency fund to rescue countries on the brink of default.

As the days were on, more and more countries moved to support such an emergency borrowing arrangement. Its size and working rules remain ill-defined. Mr. Sprinkel said the United States had been giving others more details about its plan, but he refused to disclose them to the press.

The Americans were criticized at Toronto for not coming forward in the first place with a coherent plan that would inspire confidence that the United States was determined to tackle the debt-default problem By the end of the conference, however, Mr. Sprinkel was talking about the U.S. desire to "put a bury under the saddle" of other countries to speed up the process of strengthening the monetary system against the danger of collapse.

"Our policies to cope with the fundamental problems facing the world

abe. "However, if we persuade people by demonstrating our ideas with action and a sincere heart, I am confident that our policies will be understood and will bear invaluable fruit."

The market's action this week suggests that a retrenchment to 890 level in the Dow is likely shortly," said Serge Enni, vice president of Edward A. Viner & Co.

But he noted that this pullback could be short-lived with the Dow rising in 950-980 level by year-end ceot declines and that the economy starts improving. Some analysts were disappointed by the Labor Department's report August producer prices rose 0.6 percent, the same as in July. The increase was larger than expected, according in one report

Marietta Bid Advances In Three-Way Battle

NEW YORK — Martin Mariet-ta Corp. said Friday that it has received tenders for enough shares to win cootrol of Bendix Corp.

Bendix fought back in court, counterbid in the complex takeover hattle, which pits Bendix against both Marietta and United Technologies Corp. As expected, directors of Bendix Friday rejected United Technologies' $1.5-billion offer, calling it "grossly inadelo another development, Michigan's securities office issued an order blocking the two bids for Bendix in that state. A U.S. judge in Detroit later denied requests from both Marietta and United for an order overturning the Michigan action. The state agency charged that the two companies, which have agreed to divide Bendix between each other if either wins, had among other things, omitted to "state material facts" in connection with their offers.

State statutes have often been used to block takeover bids, but typically they have proved to serve as only delaying tactics since fed-eral judges have often ruled that federal laws take precedence over Argentina May Be Bigger Danger Than Mexico

Marietta, which is offering $1.5 billion in cash and securities for Bendix, announced that 63.5 percent of Bendix shares had been submitted by Thursday at midnight. That was the deadline for Bendix shareholders to tender their boldings in order to be assured of receiving cash for at least part of their shares. The holders are allowed to withdraw any shares tendered to Marietta until Sept.

The total of 14.5 million Bendix shares tendered was 2.6 million buy for $75 apiece in cash. Marietta has proposed to acquire the hal-ance of Bendix's 23.7 million shares by swapping securities val-

Bendix said the so-called golden parachutes, granted on Tuesday, the same day United made its offer, would give the 44-year-old board chairman guaranteed pro-tection against dismissal or loss of status for the oext five years.

The takeover battle was precipi-tated by Bendix last month when it made its surprise $1.5-billioo takeover bid for Marietta, a leading acrospace concern. Marietta quiekly retaliated with a $1.5-billion offer to take over Bendix, a company with significant interests in automotive parts, electronics, heavy duty equipment and aerospace. Fed Reports U.S. M-1 Up $900 Million Compiled by Our Staff From Disputches

NEW YORK — The basic measure of the U.S. money supply, M-1, increased $900 million in the week ended Sept. 1, the New York Federal Reserve Bank said Friday. The figure was in line with a majority of forecasts, which had called for an increase ranging from $500 million to $1 billion. The Fed also revised the previous week's figure downward by $100 million to an increase of $1.4

A joint congressional subcom-mitteee Friday said that money supply growth of between zero and 3 percent "is the proper policy for the Federal Reserve to pursue

It added that a "steady as she goes" policy is the proper one to pursue after the range of zero to 3 percent is reached.

Moocy growth currently is slightly above the Fed's target for the basic measure of the money supply, M-1, of 21/2 percent to 51/2

Rapid mooey supply growth in September is expected, with most attention focused on data for the week ended Wednesday, to be reported by the Fed oext Friday. The forecasts are for increases of from $3 billion to $10 billion, but as one dealer said, "an increase of more than $3 or $4 billion has to widely forecast." Analysts said the Fed appears to be avoiding open market opera-tions that would drain reserves from the banking system.

Outlook for U.S. Steel Firms Seems Gloomy eccuives have o credibility prob-

NEW YORK - When the steel industry failed to negotiate a new contract with the United Steelworkers of America in July, some steel executives warned of dire consequences. But rather than the buge layoffs or plant closings that some predicted, the steel industry ies to bleed slowly.

Every major domestic steel comthis year, and shipments next year are expected to be mediocre. With the industry in a slump, manage-went seems prepared to hold out for a contract settlement that it finds entirely satisfactory. Analysis are saying that such a bar-gaining stance could result in a strike in 1983 for the first time since 1959.

"Things still look very bad," said Richard M. Smith, vice chairman of Bethlehem Steel, the sec-ord-largest U.S. steelmaker. "We do not see much of an upture for the balance of this year. -Charles Bradford, an industry analyst for Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, added: "Some of these companies that made money

But the aluninium industry also failed to convince its unions to agree to concessions. Aluminium workers are represented by the United Steelworkers and the Aluminium, Brick and Clayworkers International Union.

While there is still some hope of signing a steel industry contract before the present one expires next August, the negotiations in July demonstrated that steelworkers and management have very different ideas of what will cure the industry's ills. "Here they are losing $50 to $90 a ton, at a time of ultimate crisis. and they failed to work out savings with the union that are extremely teeded," said Peter Marcus, an anllyst with Paine, Webber, Mitchell

if it gives concessions, they won't have that hig an impact on saving jobs in the near term, and I gues they have a good point there," said Walter Carter, director of steel sereconomic consulting firm.

A strike in 1983 could turn a mediocre year into a disaster for the steel industry, analysts said. Not only would the steel companies lose sales hut imports would rise to fill the gap. It was after the 116-day strike in 1959 that imports began to take an increasing share of the market. In the three years preceding the 1959 strike, imports stood at little more than 1 million tons a year. The influx of imports, analysts

Thorn EMI Sees Big Drop in Profit

DONDON — Thorn EMI said Thursday it expects profit after interest payments in the first half of the financial year will be substantially below has year because of higher interest rates and the high level of investment in video rental equipment

In the first six months of last year, through Sept. 30, 1981, the company recorded pretax profit of £45.5 million ($78 million), after depreciation charges of £88.9 million and financing charges of £17.3 million.

Group May Bid for DeLorean Plant

LONDON - A U.S. group represented by DeLorean Motor Co. has agreed in principle to make an offer for the DeLorean plant in Belfast, a spokesimen for the receivers said here Friday.

He said the deal is contingent on a group of U.S. investors' putting up sufficient cash. He declined to disclose the amount of money involved but said the U.S. group is expected to reach a decision this weekend.

The company's founder, John Z. DeLorean, would have only a small stake if the deal goes through, he added. DeLorean Motor Co. had been the Chipese can be hard bargainers when contract signing time nears. These analysts do not discount the possibility that U.S. oil companies will walk away from China if its leaders try to extract too many concessions.

But some tempting numbers are being mentioned. China plans to spend about $11 hillion in the next few years on new drilling production platforms, according to Stephanie R. Green, a Commerce Department aide. Aggressive American equipment suppliers are already involved.

Brown & Root Inc. and Dresser Industries have worked out accords to haild pieces of offshore oil platforms. China and Baker Marine Corp. recently signed three contracts for joint construction of semisuhmersible drilling rigs. The South China Sea oil initiatives are just part of a freshly blooming commercial relationship between China and the United States that has already seen total exchanges quintuple from 1978. Surplus to Narrow

Last year the United States sold $3.6 billion of goods to China, mostly farm products, and bought $1.9 billion in return, mostly textiles. This year the Commerce Department estimates the U.S. trade surplus will narrow, with exports dropping to around $3.4 billion and imports rising to $2.25 hillion.

"China is our 20th largest trading partner and represents our 16th largest export market," said David Laux, who has just left the post of chief desk officer for China at the Commerce Department to join the staff of the National Security Council.

Although oil could cause the relationship to deepen, experts warn against excessive exuberance, Beijing has announced expansion programs in the past only to postpone or cancel some of the more ambitious projects.

The Chinese expect their oil investment could yield hig export earnings toward the end of this decade," said David Denny, petroleum specialist on the Commerce Department's China Desk, noting one reason petroleum development is likely to remain a high priority.

A "conservative" analysis in the China Business Review projected that by 1990 China's oil revenues could approach $16 hillion in current terms, a sum equivalent to 23 percent of China's projected imports in that year. Oil exports now account for 13 percent of total im-

Although the oil companies are close-mouthed about the results of their seismic surveys, industry officials suggest that altogether there could be more than 100 billion barrels in the offshore zone - not another Saudi Arabia but easily something approaching the North Sea total. Proximity to the huge oil market of Japan gives the resources an added value.

Exxon was one of seven companies invited to make the offshore seismic surveys, C.B. Wheeler, vice president for production, said the unexplored continental shelf area "rates highly among exploration opportunities."

The other concerns that made surveys were Phillips, Chevron, Texaco, Mohil, Adantic Richfield and Amoco. China already exports about 300,000 barrels of oil daily, which last year earned it $4 hillion in foreign exchange. But its onshore production has been declining, which has stimulated interest in tapping the offshore reserves both to maintain hard currency earnings and to provide fuel for hurgeoning indus-

OPEC Account Balance Predicted by Bankers

By Thomas Thomson Rewers

BAHRAIN - OPEC countries. helped by a strong dollar and slower import growth, are likely to end 1982 roughly in balance in their dealings with the rest of the world despite a decline in demand for oil. Arab and Western bankers the Gulf say.

Officials of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries this week predicted a current-account deficit of $9.5 billion for the 13 countries taken as a whole. OPEC based this forecast on trade data for the first few months of the

But many financial experts io the Gulf are predicting that Gulf countries, including Saudi Arabia, will still have big enough surpluses to offset deficits among the nine other members of OPEC.

Revenue Down

OPEC countries had an estimated surplus of $60 billion in 1981. But revenues have been hurt since then by a plunge in demand for OPEC oil. Recession has reduced consumption generally while the industry has been unloading oil

OPEC's daily output is prohably below 17 million barrels at present. less than had earlier been predicttion to the group's needs for in- ed for this time of the year, and OPEC's own most optimistic fore21 million barrels by December Published forecasts on OPEC's current account range from the Chase Manhattan Bank's estimate of anything from a surplus of $3 hillion to a deficit of $15 billion to a Marine Midland Bank prediction April of a surplus of $17 billion. The Middle East economists said they tentatively expect a rough balance. They said output was down and the average price had dropped below $32 a harrel from $33.20.

But there appeared to be a slowdown in import growth in the OPEC countries. Some economists predicted a rise in imports of goods and services, excluding interest payments, of only about 5 percent this year, compared with a 20-percent increase in 1981. The strength of the U.S. dollar during the summer also helped OPEC. Oil prices are set to dollars and the high value of the U.S. currency has increased OPEC's purchasing power.

The Gulf economists stressed that their predictions are highly tentative.

An end to the Iraq-Iran war, for instance, could result in both countries increasing oil sales, perhaps flooding the market and further depressing prices. An upsurge io the war might reduce oil sup-

Katharine the Great By Barbara Lunder Gillis

COLORED" Hilda Effanie has three daughters with busband Alfred: Sassafras, Cypress and Indi-go. They live in Charleston, South Carolina. Indigo is a mad little "girl-child," just turned 12 and silent except with her dolls, to whom she talks and who talk to ber. She has too much "South in her"; she helieves in the magic of her beloved Aunt Haydee the midwife; she thinks her dolls are alive and talking to her as she talks to them; hriefly, she becomes a member of a motorcycle gang. Her older sister Sassafras is, like her mother, a skilled artisan in weaving and making hangngs, a free spirit who gravitates to the West Coast, forms a faithful alliance with a ne'er-do-well lover Mitch and becomes a deeply believing member of the spiritual New World Collective. And Cypress, a trained dancer, goes to New York, loves both men and women, experiences black, exciting, violent New York City, and dreams of hlack women's liberation, for herself, her mother, her ancestors.

Shange is the author of the successful play, "For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide When The Rainbow Is Enuf" (1975), a moving work full of choral poetry and genu-ine evocation of feminine hlack experience. In 1978 she published a volume of poetry, with some prose, called "Nappy Edges," a book dedi-cated to the same three sisters whose names form the title of this, her first novel. The play and the poetry might have prepared us for the beauty and force of "Sassafras, Cypress & Indigo." Shange is primarily a poet, with a blood-red sympathy for and love of her people, their folk as well as their combinated. sophisticated ways, their innocent, loving goodness as much as their lack of immunity to powerful evil. She is a mistress of the color, shape and ring-ing, accurate imagery of their thought and their speech.

But her voice in this novel is entirely her own, an original, spare and pri-mary-colored sound that will remind readers of Jean Toomer's "Cane." In "Nappy Edges" she wrote:

"We, as a people, or as a literary cult, or a literary culture have not de-manded singularity from our writers. We could all sound the same. Come from the same region. Be the same gender. Born the same year. And though none of the above is true, a black writer can get away with ab-scond and covet for him or herself the richness of his or her person long before a black musician or singer could."

Unique Lyric Singer

This is not true of Shange, nor is it any longer true, it seems to me, of the rising generation of important black novelists and poets. Shange is a unique lyric singer whose voice is very seldom high-pitched or raucous; always it is modulated into a poetic, orchestrated sound that is not so much characteristic of fiction as it is the vocal quality of poetry. Into her narrative potpourn she tosses all the graphic elements of Southern black life: wonderful recipes (or so they seem to me, a noncook), spells and potions (how to rid oneself of the scent of evil), prescriptions (how to care for open wounds when they hurt), letters from Mama to her heloved hut straying and erring daughters, full of calm reason and uncritical love, always advising accommodation to the hostility and blindness of the white world). Mama says to the picture of her dead husband at the end: "You know, Al, I did the best I could, but I don't think they want what we wanted." They are once again together at home: Sas-safras to bear Mitch's child; Indigo. taking the dead Aunt Haydee's place, to deliver the child; Cypress to massage her hirthing sister. And of course, Mama is there.

Shange's gift lies in her ability to convey the texture of both simple and

sophisticated life, in a kind of shorthand laced with uncannily appropriate imagery. Here Indigo visits Unele

John and his dog. Yoki: "In between two lone railroad cars was Uncle John's wagon. Sequestered from ill-wishers & the wind, there be was chatting away with the air, the cars . . . Sometimes men of Color disappear into the beauty of the light, especially toward day's end. It's like clouds take on color & get down on the ground & talk to you, or the stars jump in some black man's body & shine all over you. Uncle John was looking like that to Indigo's mind, just hrushing away, leaving Yoki's coat glimmering like dusk."

At the same time she can turn her hand to vivid urban prose. Cypress misses her lover, the wealthy jazz musician, Leroy: Leroy had mediated her relationship with the City of New York. She couldn't stand it when he was gone. His horns and his arms had offered her horizons where she was free to see what she chose, feel what she had to, be what she dreamed. Now she was constrained by cement, noise, thousands of people she'd never had to take seriously. Whole blocks of black people without trees. Dance studios that looked into other dance studios. Or vacant lots crammed with tires, garbage, used strollers, broken bottles, and stench. Leroy alone shielded her from this. Now her landscape had no natural elements. In California, one was cognizant of the planet: that earth and sea were forces to contend with New York without Leroy was bereft of any humility, dwaring the sun, violating the waters, crowding nature into a yard called Central Whatever Shange turns her hand to she does well, even to potions and recipes. A white reader feels the exhilarating shock of discovery a) being per-mitted entry into this world she couldn't have known; a black reader must experience a most satisfying shock of recognition at encountering Shange's poetic-real world. The list of the new generation of fine black writers is long: Clarence Major, James Alan McPherson, Toni Cade Bam-bara, Alice Walker. David Bradley, Charles Johnson, many more. Place Niozake Shange's name high on that list, and celebrate her appearance hy reading her remarkable book.

Episcopal Church Drops Lowell, Adds Auden to Hymnal

The Associated Press NEW ORLEANS - Nineteenthcentury poet James Russell Lowell is out, and modern poet W.H. Auden is in the reshulfled contents of a new hymnbook for the 7,578 congrega-tions of the Episcopal Church.

At the church's General Conven-tion, the House of Deputies, the con-vention's lay-clergy branch, gave ap-proval to a new collection to replace the 1940 hymnal.

In much-argued refinements late Wednesday, Lowell's lyrics for "Once to Every Man and Nation" in old hymnal were voted out of the new book. But Auden's poem, "He Is the Way," was voted for inclusion among 262 new texts for the revised hymnal, to retain 347 of 600 numbers in the old book.

Earlier, the House of Bishops, the other house of the church's legislature, had authorized the new hymnal, in preparation for a decade.

Mandlikova broke Shriver's service in the first and fifth games of the final set and fended off two break points in the fourth game. Vilas Advances

On Thursday night, Guillermo Vilas scored an easy victory over Tom Gullikson to advance to the men's semilinals.

The fourth-seeded Argentinian needed only an bour and a balf to defeat Gullikson, 6-2, 6-1, 6-3. On Saturday, he will play second-seeded Jimmy Connors, the man he beat for the 1977 title. In the other semifinal, John McEnroe, the No. 1 seed, will take on Ivan Lendl,

It will be only the second time since 1968 that the top four seeded players in men's singles have reached the semilinals at either

Wimbledon, the French Open or the United States Open. At the 1969 U.S. Open, Rod

WASHINGTON - The 3d U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals has ruled that college athlene programs are subject to sex discrimination laws if any part of the college receives federal aid.

The ruling in Philadelphia was described by a lawyer for the plaintiffs as "an important victory for women's proups." It is the latest in a series of court decisions defining the scope of the federal law that forbids schools to discriminate on the basis of sex.

The defendant in the case, Temple University, received no federal grants specifically earmarked for its intercollegiate athletic program but did receive federal grants and contracts for other purposes, according to the decision issued this

"Because the university as a whole receives federal monies," the court said, "its intercollegiate ath-letic department is governed" by the federal anti-bias law. The law, Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, says:

lo its decision, the court found that approximately 10 percent of Temple University's operating budget came from the federal government, primarily in the form of grants, cootracts, loans and interest subsidies for construction. In addition, it said, Temple students received millions of dollars in federal grants and loans to pay tuition and other costs.

Judge D. Dortch Warriner of the U.S. District Court in Richmond, Virginia, considered the same issue in a case with similar facts and reached the opposite conclusion last July. Warriner ruled that the Education Depart-ment could not investigate the athletic department at the University of Richmond because the department did not receive "direct federal financial assistance." The plaintiffs in the Temple University case, eight female undergraduates, charged that the university had violated Title IX by favoring men over women in the distributon of athletic scholarships, travel money and athleoc equip-ment and in the scheduling of practice sessions and intercollegi-ate games. The National Women's ATHENS — Patriz Ilg of West Germany won the 3,000-meter steeplechase Friday at the European track and field championships with a driving finish. He finished in 8:18.52, while Boguslaw Maminski of Law Center, a nonprofit organization, was counsel for the plaintiffs.

If Temple does not appeal, the case will go back to the U.S. District Court in Philadelphia for a Ann-Louise Skoglund's gold medal in the 400-meter hurdles was the first by a Swedish woman in the 48-year history of the European championships and the first by any Swede since 1950.

Contract Disputes, Individual and Collective, Cloud Outlook as Pro Football Season Opens

By William N. Wallace

New York Times Service
NEW YORK — When the National Football League's 63d seasoo begins on Sunday, Billy Sims will play but Rob Carpenter, Joe Cribbs, Leon Gray and Bob Swenson will not. These five were the most prominent holdouts in a summer of cuntention for pro football, conten-tion that continues with the players and owners still apart in their efforts to reach a new collective bargaining agreement,

Sims, who jained his team, the Detroit
Lions, on Wednesday, will be in the starting lineup at halfback against Chicago, according to his coach, Monte Clark, and for good reason. The Lions gained the most yards rushing in the league last season, thanks to Sims, who contributed 1,437 of the total of 2,795.

But the New York Giants must start without Carpenter, their unsigned fullback, and the Buffalo Bills without Cribbs, their halfback seeking a renegotiated contract. Both were just as meaningful to their teams as was Sims to his. Gray, Houston's onetime all-pro offensive tackle, and Swenson, Denver's outstanding linebacker, are also without contracts and their teams are diminished without them.

The following games will be played in the NFL this weekend. Exhibition records are in parentheses. The betting line is from Harrah's Reno-Tahoe Sports Book

NATIONAL CONFERENCE

Atlanta (2-2) at New York Giants (1-3) -The Falcons have seven Pro Bowl players in their offensive unit but William Andrews, the running back who gained 1,301 yards, is injured and a questionable performer. Bo Robinson would be his replacement. Cliff Chatman is the Giants' choice for fullback in place of Carpenter, if Leoo Perry cannot play. Chatman was injured last year and has over played in a regular-season game. The team's defense is fine, the offense unproven. Betting choice: Giants by 1½ points.

Chicago (1-3) at Detroit (2-2) — Bob Avellini, who last held the job in 1978, is the Bears' quarterback, but the competition did not satisfy the new coach, Mike Ditka. The offensive tackles have injuries, but Walter Payton is fine and so is the defense. With Sims on the field the young but seasoned Lions appear to be the Central Division favorite. Betting choice: Detroit by 51/2.

Los Angeles Rams (2-2) vs. Green Bay (2-2) at Milwaukee — Mike Barber at oght end and Bert Jones at quarterback are the significant additions to the Rams' attack, which wilted badly last season. Gerry Ellis and Eddie Lee lvery, the Packers' fine running backs who have had injury histories, are fit. Betting choice: Rams by 1.

St. Louis (1-3) at New Orleans (1-3) — The Cardinals start two rookies, Luis Sharpe and Tootie Robbins, at offensive tackle, and that is taking a risk. Neil Lomax is established at quarterback, and the team's chances will de-pend un a revamped defense. The Saints are a patchwork assembly of old and young players. The new kicker, Morten Andersen, has done well. Betting choice: Even.

Tampa Bay (3-1) at Minnesota (3-2) - The Vikings, who will be playing on artificial turf at home in a new indoor stadium, have attempted to improve team speed. They will rotate four running backs, Ted Brown, Rickey Young, Tony Galbraith and the swift rookie, Darrin Nelson. The Buccancers have only two effective running backs ready, James Wilder and James Owens; the coach, John McKay, is worried. Betting choice: Minnesota by 21/2.

Washington (0-4) at Philadelphia (1-3) - Joe Washington's knce injury was devastating to the Redskins' attack. Wilbur Jackson, who lacks Washington's versatility, is the replacement at halfback, with John Riggins at full-back. There are defensive problems, too. The Eagles, who lost live of their final six games last season, are essentially the same team, even with four lineup changes. Betting choice: Phila-

INTERCONFERENCE

Los Angeles Raiders (2-2) at San Francisco (2-2) — Coach Tom Flores's goal is to preserve the Raiders' concentration amid the turmoil of and play home games in Los Angeles. Jim Plunkett has regained the quarterback position over Mare Wilson. "We didn't stand still," says Bill Walsh, coach of the Super Bowl champion 49ers. The most significant of four promotions was Amos Lawrence over Ricky Patton at halfback. Patton, the team's leading rusher, was cut. Betting choice: San Francisco by 51/2.

AMERICAN CONFERENCE

San Diego (2-2) at Denver (4-0) - Chuck Muncie, who spent two stints this summer in a drug rehabilitation center, will start at running back for the Chargers. They made needed changes on defense. Dan Reeves, the Bronco coach, chose Craig Morton over Steve DeBerg as his quarterback. It was a tough decision. Betting choice: Denver by 11/2. Miami (2-1-1) at New York Jets (1-3) -

Injuries, which accounted fur the Jets' poor pass protection for Richard Todd, dictated a late change in the offensive line, Stan Waldemore to center and Joe Fields to guard, Betting choice; Jets by 21/2.

Houston (2-2) at Cincinnati (1-3) — The Bengals' Super Bowl team is intact. The defense gave up 115 points in the exhibition games, more than any other team. "Not important, said the coach, Forrest Gregg. The Oilers promise a more wide-open offense run by Gif-ford Nielsen. Earl Campbell is the fullback and Donnie Craft, a 12th-round draft choice, the halfback promoted this week. Betting choice: Cincinnad by 71/2. Kansas City (2-1-1) at Buffalo (3-1) — Bill Kenney won the quarterback competition from Sieve Fuller for the Chiefs. Their defense should be strong with Art Still and Mike Bell, the ends, free from injuries for a change. With Cribbs absent and Roland Hooks burt, the Bills' halfback will be Curtis Brown. The Bills again have a veteran team that gained little from the draft, Betting choice: Buffalo by 31/2. Cleveland (4-0) at Seattle (1-3) - Jim Zorn, the Seahawks' quarterback since the team's inception in 1976, has lost his job to Dave Krieg. Sherman Smith also displaced Theoris Brown at fullback, and there were three changes in the offensive line. The Browns anticipate a big season, in part because of two new linebackers, Chip Banks, the No. 1 draft choice, and Tom Cousineau from the Canadian Football League, Betting choice: Cleveland by 21/2.

New England (1-3) at Baltimore (3-2) bouse, and only 20 of last year's 45 players remain. A rookie, Mike Pagel, is the quarterpack, and the defense, which gave up a record 533 points, is almost all new. The Patriots also have many changes, most on defense. Matt Cavanaugh is the quarterback. Tony Collins and Robert Weathers, a rookie, the running backs Betting choice: New England by 21/2. MONDAY NIGHT

Pittsburgh (4-0) at Dallas (3-1) - The Cowboys are the pre-season favorites in most polls to win the Super Bowl. Even Coach Total Landry, a conservative sort, concedes that his squad is strong and deep. The Steelers rebuilt their defense with Robin Cole, a linebacker and end, now a key figure. An injury will delay the debut of Walter Abercrombie, the outstanding rookie halfback. Frank Pollard will be filling in. Betting choice: Dallas by 4.

Going for the Big Fish

WASHINGTON — There is a lot of plea bargaining going platter. on in our courts these days. The prosecutors keep saying they have judge and tell him Sharkey is a key to deal with criminals to avoid expensive trials and also to get the again little fish to testify against the big out.

The only problem with the second argument is that so many little fish get off the hook to catch a big fisb, that many times no one is caught. This is how it works. _ ''All rigbt. Trout, we know you biew off Bar-Buchwald racuda's head in New Jersey, because he wasn't kicking back on the guns he sold to Libya. If you testify against Mackerel to the grand jury we'll drop your murder charge down to driving without a license."

Trout goes for the offer, and the prosecutors soon get a visit from Mackerel's attorneys. "If you let Mackerel off," his attorneys say, "on a vagrancy charge, he'll be the star witness against Sharkey, who is the biggest dope dealer south of

The Justice Department has been after Sharkey for years, so they say, "You've got a deal." Sharkey is arrested oo Mack-erel's testimooy and beld on $10million bail.

After a week in the slammer, Sharkey tells a government attoroey, "I was just a courier in the dope business. If you really want some big fish, lower my bail to $5.000 and I'll deliver whoever you "Can you give us Bass?" the government altorney asks.

Jefferson Portrait Sold

The Associated Press WASHINGTON — A portrait of Thomas Jefferson painted by Gilbert Stuart in 1805 has been purchased jointly by the National Portrait Gallery and the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Foundation Inc. for $1 million, it was announced Thursday. The portrait of the nation's third president, called the "Edgehill" image, was bought from Mr. and Mrs. Dooald B. Straus of New York.

The Justice people go to the witness in a case they're building against Bass, and has to be bailed

Sure enough, two months later Justice has Bass nailed to the wall for running the largest white slavery business in the United States. But he's hiding in Brazil. He sends word that he's willing to come back and blow the whistle on Whale, the most notorious labor racketeer in the country, but only if they drop the felony charges, and prosecute him for spitting in the subway.

Justice says they can't make that kind of deal. But if Bass is willing to turn state's evidence they might reduce the 100 white slavery counts to one count of selling liquor to a minor. Bass goes for it and lo and behold Whale has been arrested for the first time in his life.

Justice is preparing the prosecu-tion when Whale drops a bomb on them. If they overlook the labor racket and extortion charges, Whale says he can implicate a United States congressman in a Brink's robbery.
The FBI checks out Whale's story and finds out it's true. They promise Whale if be testifies to everything he knows, they'll give him a new identity, a job and a con-dominium in Palm Beach, Florida. Whale starts singing and the U.S. congressman is a dead duck. So the congressman offers to testify against one of the "highest" officials in the United States, who has been geiting regular payoffs from Fidel Castro. The Justice Department lets the congressman plea-bargain his way down to "malicious parking," and start their case against the "high" government official. But just before they're ready to go into court they get a visit from the CIA, telling them the high gov-ernment official really works for them. They warn the Justice people that if the official is tried, the entire U.S. espionage effort against Cuba will be destroyed. Justice drops the case, and with oo big fish to fry, they go back to finding out if they can get a better deal from the courts for breaking up the telephooe company.

A Pianist's Comeback

The Right Hand of Leon Fleisher Will Return

To the Keyboard After 18 Years

By Joseph McLellan

WASHINGTON — The music world is about to hear asound it has not heard in 18 years: the sound produced by the right hand of Leon Fleisher.

On Sept. 16, in the new Joseph Meyerhoff Sympbony Hall in Baltimore, Fleisher will make the most dramatic return to the piano since Vladimir Horowitz came out of voluntary retirement in 1965. Fleisher's concert, with the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra at the gala opening of its new hall will be broadcast live on WETA-FM and taped by the Maryland Center for Public Broadcasting for nationwide U.S. simulcast on Sept. 25.

Fleisher's right hand was silenced by a neurological problem in 1964, when he was 37. He recalls it as "the gradual onset of a syndrome that they actually call writer's cramp — an involuntary curling under of the fourth and fifth fungers and an inability to get them straightened out in time to play the next cotes." A similar problem has also disabled the right band of Gary Graffman, an-other American pianist of international stature and a friend of Fleisher's. "Gary is watching my progress very carefully, and we are in constant communication," Fleisher says. "He is seriously considering my treatment, but at the moment he is going a different route. He is now in the middle of another series of procedures."

Pressurized Conditions Before this problem hit him,

Fleisher was one of the most acclaimed pianists in the world and one of the busiest. Perhaps too busy. "I had been doing an awful lot of playing under pressurized conditioos," he recalls, "During the last year before I stopped, I played 21 times in New York City lone. I had worked my muscles into a state where they no longer relaxed between performances, a state of chronic tension. I suffered from a sort of petrified muscles." Remembering those days, Fleisher is planning to make his comeback very slowly. He has accepted only two piano engagements for the coming season and is much more definite about his conducting plans, including a Stravinsky program Oct. 2 at the Terrace Theater with the Theater Chamber Players.

Even after his long absence as a two-handed pianist, some of Fleisher's records — notably the sets of Beethoven and Brahms concertos with the Cleveland Orchestra and George Szell - are still in circulation and are regarded by many critics as standardsetters. But in recent years, his live piano performances have been limited to the meager repertoire for the teft hand: chiefly concertos by Ravel and Prokofiev, a set of "Diversions" with orchestra by Benjamin Britten and a quintet with strings by Franz

Schmidt. During the years of his disabili-ty, Fleisher also became active in chamber music and conducting, as music director of the Theater Chamber Players in Washington since the group's establishment in 1968, associate conductor of the Baltimore Symphony for the last five years and music director of the Annapolis Symphony for 12 years. He has also been a faculty member of the Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore since 1959.

Fleisher has been undergoing therapy on his right hand since January, following surgery for a condition called "carpal tunnel." related to wrist flexibility. The therapy, twice a week at the Northern Virginia Myotherapy Clinic in Springfield, involved a lot of detail work on the hand, back and shoulder" and "a series of strength and stretch exercises to rebuild the muscle efficiency, according to Nancy Shaw of the clinic, a therapist who has be-come a fan of Fleisher's music.

"I was at the rehearsal last week and it went extremely well,"

Substitution

Rumors that Fleisher was thinking of a return to the standard repertoire have been circulating since last spring. But his fi-nal decision was made only a few days ago, long after the orchestra confidently announced that he would play Beethoven's Fourth

Piano Concerto - one of his specialties in the old days - at its gala opening Fieisher has decided at the last minute to substitute Franck's Symphonic Variations. He will probably get back to Beethoven later, he said, but "at the moment, I'm not planning or projecting; I've got to see how things go for a while."

He still has accepted only one other offer for public appearance as a two-handed planist, in March, with the Theater Chamber Players.

"It's still not quite the way it was before," he said. "I have tried to get in a lot of early rehearsals, while they were tuning the new hall, and I think it will be easier the time Sept. 16 rolls by around."

His therapy uses some of the techniques of rolling — deep, intensive massage that deliberately deprives some muscles of oxygen for up to eight seconds, making it impossible for them to remain in a state of contraction. "They use elbows, knuckles and fingers with great traction and great weight, he said. They go up and down each muscle in a very painstaking and painful process, using deep and heavy pressure the entire length of the muscle until it loos-

Fleisher's withdrawal from the concert stage came on the brink of a tour of the Soviet Union with George Szell and the Cleveland Orchestra. "I had just finished a performance of Mozart's K. 503," he recalls (the Piano Concerto No. 25 in C, and their recording of it is still on the market), "and we decided I simply could not do it" His first reaction was a depression that lasted several years. "Then," he says, "I managed to pick myself up. One thing that contributed to my recovery was [friend and fellow pianist] Dina Koston's idea of starting the The-ater Chamber Players. She came to me and discussed the idea. wanted to know whether it seemed feasible and I might become the artistic director. She invited me - practically forced me into a conducting role. After my first year with the Players, having gotten my feet wet as a conductor, I was ready to take over the directorship of the Annapolis Symphony.

Fleisher was familiar with orchestral music before becoming a conductor. "I used to play a lot of the orchestral repertoire in fourhand piano arrangements," he re-"and sometimes I would play the orchestral parts of concertos in piano reduction for friends who were practicing the solo part." One such friend was Graffman, who won the Leventritt Competition in 1949 playing the Brahms D-minor concerto while Fleisher played the orchestral part on a second piano. In his autobiography, Graffman calls his friend "the Fieisher Philharmonic" and recalls that some of the judges wanted to give Fleisher a prize, although he was not competing. He won the Queen Elisa-beth Competition in Brussels three years later.

While he was still a student of Artur Schnabel, Fieisher also became a protégé of Pierre Mon-teux, who publicly called him

"the pianistic find of the century" and began engaging him as a so-loist when he was 14 years old. He spent summers in Maine, where Monteux ran a school for conductors, and there he learned the technique, although Monteux would not allow him to conduct

"I would ask him, "Can I conduct?" Fleisher recalls, "and he would say, 'No. Once you get a stick in your hand, you will never let it go.' I think he was right. I don't want to give up conducting. No matter how negative my expe-nence has been, it was a soil for further growth and I'm terribly grateful for that opportunity. Being a pianist is really a very solitary occupation, but compared to being a conductor, in a way, it is very huxurious. You can practice forever, try things this way and that at your own pace, go out for a glass of water and come back when you're ready. With an orchestra, economics and time limits come in; you have to diagnose a problem and come up with your prescription immediately."

PEOPLE Judge Revokes License Of Paris McDonald's

Upholding claims of filthy condi-tons in a dozen McDonaid's res-taurants in Paris, a Chicago judge revoked the license to develop more restaurants. Cook County Circuit Judge Richard L Curry ordered Raymond Dayan to remove all McDonald's signs, equipment and other trademark material from 12 of his 14 restaurants in Paris. He had been given a license to derants in France, but McDonald's charged Dayan's operations did not meet commany not meet company standards for quality, service and cleanliness. Dayan replied, The French people are dirty and don't, have the same values as to cleanliness." In the suit, Dayan charged McDonald's with breach of contract for denying his license to expand the restaurants: McDonald's is based in Oak Brook, Illinois.

Norman Mailer is finally divorced from his fourth wife, which is nice for wives five and six. He first was divorced from No. 4. Bevshe was unhappy with the financial settlement that awarded her a himp sum of $7,500, plus $575 a week alimony for seven years, and other than the seven was to be a seven week alimony for seven years, and other expenses. So she sought to have the divorce set aside which would have made problems for No. 5, Carol Stevens, and No. 6, Norris Charell, the current title-holder. Massachusetts, Supreme hidicial Court in Boston upheld the divorce but said No. 4 can en the divosce, but said No. 4 can go to court for more money.

Eleven crew members from the only German submarine captured silCOPI in World War H and the American m world War H and the Americans who took them prisoner held a spirited reunion in Chicago. The German organizer of the reunion. Hans Gobeler, 59, and Earl Troston, 75, Springfield, Ohio, the second man to board the U-505, toosted each other with been steins. The U-505 was constrained. The U-505 was captured on June 4, 1944, 150 miles off the coast of Africa. The takeover was considered erucial to find secrets aboard, including a codebook, which was sent to Washington, Gobeler said when the Germans learned the Americans had salvaged the ship they couldn't believe it. We that thought that no one would be brave enough to board that sinking ship." The U-505 is on permanent exhibit at the Museum of Science and Industry in Chicago. Section.

NO SIGIL INVOLVED.

It's a business that combines today's hattest trands. TV comeros and instant pictures. A high quolity bystem that o low in price, portable and requires absolutely no technical expanience.

The Kena Computer Particul System can be set up anywhere - fairs, holiday creas, shopping carters, conventions, hoteles - anywhere with high pedestrian traffic. It's an instant furtific stopper that makes a portrait just in seconds. The picture o first seen on a TV screen, then dramptically private before your eyes on a correction printout.

And litera's more. You can transfer the portraits - instantly - to T-shirt, posters, colondary, puzzles and other light mark-up profit items. There a also a color option-let evaluable that olives you to groudure color portraits. Systems priced from $12,500 to $29,000 FOB Frankfurt.
